HUAHINE

SOCIETY ISLANDS, FRENCH POLYNESIA
ARRIVAL 08:00AM | ALL ABOARD 4:30PM

Huahine is located 175 km North-West of Tahiti within the Leeward Islands or better known as the "Society Islands". The island is made up of two mountainous ranges of Huahine Nui (big) and Huahine Iti (small). The population of 6,000 people live among eight villages with the main town being FARE, the image of a sleepy Polynesian port town. Settled in the 1830's, this former whaling port was established for those ships going North and South during the months of May and June. The village sits along the waterfront with different general stores and some tourist opportunities.

In times past, Huahine was a center for Polynesian culture, with it now being one of the richest in archeological sites, thanks to the hard work of archeologist's like Yoshi Sinoto. In the village of Maeva you will find close to thirty Marae (ceremonial temples) restored. Its Marae and grounds are one of the larger Marae complexes in Polynesia. For a change of pace take an unusual and fun visit along the coastal road of Huahine-Nui. In Faie, at a certain part of the river, you find the home to some very unusual residents.

Tahitian eels! Sacred eels! These eels range in size from 3 to 6 feet long and are very interesting to look at. They have fins along their side which many people think are "ears" and their eyes are a translucent cold blue color. They are believed to be found only on Tahiti, Moorea and Huahine. Why are they "sacred", you might ask? The ancient legend says that the first eel crawled across the mountains from a pool in Arue, on the north coast of Tahiti. Feeling lonely, the eel married a beautiful maiden from Mataiea.

Regardless of who believes the mythology behind these slithery yet graceful creatures, the eels today remain a tourism favorite and mainstay on the island of Huahine.

They are gentle, harmless and are only interested in "sacred mackerel" from "sacred cans" that can be purchased at any "sacred market" on the island.
