BORA BORA

SOCIETY ISLANDS, FRENCH POLYNESIA
OVERNIGHT

Bora Bora is a little jewel of an island set within a wide barrier reef through which there is only one pass, Te Ava Nui. Like others of the Leeward Islands, Bora Bora is the eroded cone of an extinct and extensive volcano.

The eastern part of the island is dominated by the spectacular basaltic mountain named, Otemanu, meaning the sea of birds, while the isles of Toopua and Toopua-iti are the remnants of the western rim. The ancient Polynesians called this island Porapora or first born believing that it was the first island to rise after Hava'i (Raiatea).

Captain James Cook was the first westerner to sight Bora Bora in 1769. The London Missionary Society arrived in 1820 and most of the islanders converted to Protestantism. The missionaries staunchly supported local rule and enacted codes to keep Bora Bora out of the treaties signed between Pomare V and the French who did not annex the island until 1888.

During World War II, 5,000 American troops were dispatched to the island to establish a supply base for materials enroute to the Solomon Islands. During that time they built a wharf at Farepiti and the airstrip on Motu Mute. Although this airstrip was closed after the war, it was reactivated in 1951 and used as the international airfield of French Polynesia until the jet strip was completed on Tahiti in 1961.

The Bora Bora Motu is a strip of white sand, isolated yet with an open bar, shaded palm trees and beautiful clear turquoise waters. Kayaks, volleyball and great snorkeling are available for your enjoyment.

Please Note: There are no restrooms and no food available on the Motu. Beverages will be available at the Bar. Please use the beach towels from your stateroom. We request that all guests stay within the boundaries of our beach to respect the privacy of the local residents. Please be aware that in French Polynesia, it is illegal to remove any Coral from the motu or reef.

Notes for Bora Bora Motu

Please be advised that arrival at the Motu is a wet landing.

Please exercise caution when snorkeling.

Please do not stand on the coral and be aware of the current at all times as they can be very strong.

It is recommended to wear reef shoes.
